Stocks March Higher Powered By Earnings

We have argued that the most important factor to drive stocks prices is corporate earnings.

We are early in the 3Q24 earnings season and, so far, earnings are beating expectations. Companies that are surprising to the upside are rallying, especially when their corporate outlook for the future is positive. Importantly, when we look at projected earnings of the next 12-months globally, the U.S. is forecast to have the best earnings in the world! Strong earnings growth and the best earnings in the world are powering stocks higher, driving the S&P 500 and Dow Jones Industrial Average to record highs.

Seasonally, equity markets have a powerful rally from mid-October to the end of the year, rallying on average 5%. We maintain the view that we are in a secular bull market and that the S&P 500 can reach 6000 this year.

3Q GDP Forecast To Grow Above 3%

There is a strong correlation between economic growth and corporate earnings. The Atlanta Fed GDPNow estimated that GDP growth for 3Q24 is running at a 3% level. Economists have needed to raise their GDP estimates this year, which has also been a positive support for the equity market. This model can have volatility, but the point is that the economy is growing – and at a healthy pace. Supporting the economy is the Federal Reserve recalibrating interest rates lower to the neutral rate (r*). Strong economic growth should lead to continued strong earnings, allowing the equity markets to continue to march to new record highs.

Crude Oil Has Fallen Sharply, Supporting Earnings & Consumer Spending

WTI crude oil has fallen sharply since the high of $87 this year, taking many investors by surprise, given the current geopolitical tensions, particularly in the Middle East. The reason for lower oil prices is that the supply and demand for oil is out of balance with more supply than demand. One main reason for the imbalance is the outlook for weaker economic growth resulting from China lowering its demand for oil. Technically, WTI oil is trending toward $65. Lower oil prices boost corporate profits for two reasons: they act like a tax cut for consumers, allowing them to spend more, and a portion of corporate expense is reduced.

S&P 500 At Record Highs But Very Overbought

Many did not expect the S&P 500 to be at a record high in October as the months of September and October are seasonally very volatile. November is the month with seasonally very strong rallies. But at the current moment, the S&P 500 – rallying strongly since September – finds itself very overbought. So, some bucking of the Bull should not be ruled out, especially as we enter into the home stretch of the Presidential election (15 days as of today). But we remain confident that even if stocks have a pullback, the fundamental backdrop is strong, and it should support continued new highs in the equity market.

Market Breadth Supports New Highs In S&P 500

Outside of better earnings supporting higher stock prices, the breadth of the equity market has broadened out with the NYSE Cumulative Advance-Decline Line also reaching record highs, confirming the record highs in the S&P 500.

Nasdaq 100 Is Not As Overbought & We Expect New Record Highs

The part of the equity market that has taken more time to consolidate is Technology and Technology-related sectors, which are both strongly represented in the Nasdaq 100. The Nasdaq 100 has not reached new record highs yet, but we anticipate this to happen as the strongest earnings are expected from this area of the market.

Gold Also Glittering At Record Highs

Gold has also been marching to new record highs. Why? It could be current geopolitical worries, ongoing fears of future inflation, the concern over the potential weakness in the U.S. Dollar (due to the high Federal debt level), or any combination of the three. How much Gold has rallied this year has been a big surprise to investors. Gold is outperforming the equity market – it's up 32% versus the S&P 500 up 23% and the Nasdaq 100 up 21%. With a very huge base breakout in Gold, we expect gold to continue to reach new glittering heights. We believe that, over the coming years, Gold could be marching toward $4000.

Bitcoin Has Major Upside Breakout

Bitcoin is the best performing asset this year, up over 60% year-to-date. But it may not feel this way as it has been consolidating. From a technical perspective, Bitcoin has experienced a high level of consolidation for nearly the whole year, following a surge at the start of 2024. Last week Bitcoin broke to the upside and the technical measurement of Bitcoin points to another leg of the rally toward $100,000.

Earnings Set The Table For An Autumn Rally

This week another wave of strong corporate earnings should reinforce the current market breadth.

As earnings season marches on, so too should the current rally. This week we'll hear from some of the Magnificent 7 companies as well as several bellwether consumer-focused companies. Investors will be looking to gobble up corporate earnings data like so much candy corn – but importantly, they'll also be listening to what managements say about their future outlook. We do not expect anything scary – in fact we're anticipating a cornucopia of optimism.
